

STRANGER THINGS

In the small town of Hawkins, Indiana, a teenager has disappeared.

We are in the early 80s, Bon Jovi, Duran Duran and Cyndi Lauper are on top of the list and Arcade games are the most interesting entertainment for adolescents.

Will Byers, a 12-year-old boy, was cycling back home after playing "Dungeons and Dragons" in his friend's house. He likes the role of the Wizard, so he was thinking in the play when something happened. A strange feeling, a strange anguish, the sky becoming dark and the certainty that something is wanting you.

The next day, the bicycle is the only thing his family found from him.

Everyone in the gang started looking for him in the woods with no positive results. They are exhausted and worried when finally, Mike found something: a girl with a shaved head in a hospital gown!! She knows nothing about herself, couldn't barely speak and she's alone and afraid. They decided to hide her in Mike's house for a while and go to the police, but soon they discover that the girl, who they name Eleven, has psychokinetic abilities. There's no choice, she must keep hidden.

Will's mother begins to appreciate strange feelings at home, she concludes Will is trying to communicate with her, and supernatural events affecting the house electricity finally convinced her. She asked for help to the police chief, a not very conventional one, and bit by bit their suspicions point to the nearby national laboratory.

As they are coping with the difficulties to obtain information, a high school girl disappears from a party...
